

2.4

"A POW DAIRY - My Father's Struggle" documents the long march into captivity and over 800 days of desperation, treachery and brutality. It is presented in a manner that allows the reader to understand the human side of captivity. You will learn how the men coped with the knowledge that for them, the war was over and they may never get home again.

Understand for the first time the affect the Chinese entry into the war had not only on the prisoners, but the North Korean civilians as well.

Includes a list of over 1250 Korean War POW/MIAs found during the research conducted for the books.

Watch for the companion book "Letters from the Heart - The Victims at Home" coming soon. A compilation of government documents and letters written by POWs and their families. The letters are a time capsule back almost 50 years and provide insight into the era, the family ties, and the heartbreak caused by uncertainty and loss of control over their lives.
