The image shows a grid of graph paper. It is divided into two main horizontal sections by a single horizontal line. The top section is 10 rows high, and the bottom section is 10 rows high. A vertical line is drawn on the left side, creating a narrow column on the far left. The grid is composed of small squares, with the vertical line being slightly wider than the other columns. There are 11 columns in total, including the narrow left column. The grid is empty and ready for use.
