AB 1934 would make it a misdemeanor, punishable by a $1,000 fine and six months in jail, to carry an exposed handgun in a public place or on a public street in a city or in prohibited areas of unincorporated county territory.

The bill contains numerous exceptions, including display of a firearm by a peace officer, a firearms dealer, a target-shooter at a range, a gun-show participant, and by a licensed hunter while engaged in that sport.

Assemblywoman Lori Saldaña, a San Diego Democrat who crafted AB 1934, said it is meant to assist police officers who must respond to reports of a gun-toting person or crowd without knowing whether the firearms are loaded or the participants violent.

California law currently allows officers to examine whether the weapons are loaded but not to demand identification or gun-registration documents from the owners, she said.
